

Looking forward to the States - local psychic Pat Deadman. 9746/11.

Psychic ready for USA trip

PSYCHIC Pat Deadman is heading Stateside from his West Leake home - but did he see it coming?

Psychic Pat gave up his job at the Brush 12 years ago to make a full time career out of telling fortunes.

Since then, he has looked into the lives (and life lines) of household names such as Engelbert Humperdinck, Boy George and newsreader Pamela Armstrong.

More than a decade later, Pat's reputation has gone before him all the way to the United States - where he has now enlisted the help of a promoter.

Pat explained: "American people are very enthusiastic and open minded.

Exciting

"I have never had a promoter before so this is a very exciting time."

Pat has already spent an initial two week, all-expenses-paid stint in Texas, working as a consultant for a JR-style oil magnate.

Now he is looking forward to heading back to America in October where he is being billed as an 'ethical' psychic.

Pat explained: "These Mystic Meg type characters give people false hope whereas I try to give accurate guidance.

"The average person in the street thinks all people are like Mystic Meg when, in fact, psychics have been around for all time."

Pat, who was a pupil at Garendon and Burleigh, comes from a family of travelling Romanies and says clairvoyance was part of his native culture.

(Deadman is also his real surname!)

But he also believes that anyone can get in touch with their psychic side - and is more than willing to give them a little help.

He said: "I help to educate people about clairvoyance and to look into their own lives.

"Being a psychic is my vocation, it is my calling in life.

"When I met my wife, I told her I would marry her and she did not believe me. But I proved her wrong.

"Everything I have got, I have predicted for myself."

He now lives with his wife Kate, a reflexologist, and their children James and Katherine in West Leake - and has no intention of giving it up for the lure of the States.

Pat said: "I love it around here and I love the countryside.

"And there is nothing better than coming back to England for a good pint of bitter."

Anyone who would like guidance from Pat, or to invite him along to group meetings or workshops, can contact him on (01509) 856548.